What should a cover letter be? A brief bout of self-aggrandizement? A statement of how our mutual interests align? Deeper insights into my personality and education? My ability to convert text to pdf on Linux, or a robust if subtle statement about my particular sense of humor?

The quick stuff that isn't covered in the header of my resume is that I've been called 'Wook' since 1978. I like to code, a lot, but I suspect my 'best' value is in Software Engineering Management. I like working with a solid team, almost as much as I like building a solid team.

I have (literally) over 50 years of software development experience in a wide set of environments, building software for a wide set of purposes.

And that's me.

I sign email like this:

"Love, Wook"
